1. Open a new file in Photoshop and start by creating a new layer below the Background layer (Image → Layer → New Layer), and then start drawing and painting. To create this painting, start with the Background color fill. The paintbrush with the solid black color shown in Figure 1.2 is already in the toolbox in Photoshop. In Photoshop, tools and the toolbox are organized in dropdown tabs. From the toolbox, choose the brush tool and then select a brush that produces a solid color. See Chapter 2 to learn more about brushes. You can also use the Brush tool to paint with a solid color. Using a brush with a 50% opacity (click the Brush tool once and then click with the Brush tool to turn on the opacity slider), paint with a green color to darken it, for example. 2. Use the Eraser tool to erase areas of the layer. Then click with the Brush tool again to use a color you've already selected. Paint over the Background layer with a color you want as the Background color. The Background color determines the color of the layer, so the color in this case is white. After creating the layer and painting over it, you can see the effect in the Layers panel (Figure 1.3). When you paint with the brush tool, it erases areas with the current color as a light gray. This means the areas you want to keep and paint over are dark and the ones you don't need are shown as light gray. Figure 1.3. You can erase areas with the Brush tool and then use the Brush tool to paint the rest. 3. When you're done with the painting, select the Background layer and press Delete. The image is now on its own layer, ready for further editing. You might want to add a few more layers, to change the color of the painting or add a background or text under it. ## Using Lightroom With Lightroom, a much more capable imaging program, you can import photos and quickly create the right image. But as a beginner, you don't want to have to learn a new program. That's why I cover Lightroom as an alternative to Photoshop.

Results of prospective, controlled studies with different compression devices (author's transl)]. The results of eight controlled studies of a total of 230 patients are reported, who had at least one non-healing venous ulcer in spite of compression treatment by bandage, hose or elastic stockings. Depending on the treated condition and the length of follow-up, 3.5 to 15% of the patients healed during observation time up to a maximum of 24 months. While the majority of the 40% of patients with superficial chronic ulcers and the majority of the healing patients had treated bandages, hose or stockings the patients with deep ulcers or recurrent ulcers healed only in a minority. In spite of good results with simple bandage or hose treatment, we found more satisfactory healing results in the patients with ulcer size of more than 2 cm in diameter (61%) and in those treated with elastic stockings, as compared to those with bandages or hose treatment (23%). These results have important implications for indication of proper treatment of chronic venous ulcers. to the company and I feel that any move the company made was calculated.
